

INDIA'S INTELLECTUAL TRADITIONS
Attempts at Conceptual Reconstructions

Editor: Daya Krishna

2003
(2nd edition)
228 pages
Hard Back
ISBN 81-85636-52-4
Rs 420

“A pioneering exploration of India’s intellectual traditions in the field of political science, sociology, law and aesthetics.”

India is known for its sustained seeking and achievements in the realms of the spirit and arts over millennia. But, its intellectual enterprise in various fields of knowledge spread over more than 2000 years is almost terra incognita not only to scholars in the West, but also to those who work in these fields in India. This book is an invitation to scholars to look at the hard-core intellectual enterprise of India and to discover its rich potentials for further growth and development and to provide cognitive alternatives to current models in these fields. An attempt to explore the perspective in which indigenization in the social sciences and the humanities may possibly be carried on by Indian scholars in the future.

The work attempts to articulate conceptual structures in these domains on the basis of the foundational texts relating to them, and to make them available to the modern scholar so that he may use them creatively for his own purposes.

Daya Krishna (b. 1924) taught philosophy at the universities of Sagar and Rajasthan. He has been Visiting Professor at Carleton College, Northfield and the University of Hawaii. He has held Fellowships at, among other places, East-West Centre, Hawaii; the Rockefeller Foundation, USA; Indian Institute of Philosophy, Amalner; Indian Council of Philosophical Research; and Indian Council of Social Science Research.